PhD-Day, 18th May 2018, University of Hildesheim, Research Data Management

In the winter semester 2011/12, the doctoral course Social and Organizational Education was established at the University of Hildesheim.

Information about the Institute for Social and Organizational Education can be found here: https://www.uni-hildesheim.de/fb1/institute/institut-fuer-sozial-und-organisationspaedagogik/

© Andres Rodriguez / 123RF.COM

(Image: https://www.uni-hildesheim.de/studium/studienangebot/bachelorstudium/sozial-und-organisationspaedagogik-bachelor-of-arts-ba/)

The PhD course regulates and organizes the course-related examinations for all doctoral candidates in the Social and Organizational Education research field of the institute. These are to be provided as part of the doctoral studies in Department I of the University of Hildesheim.

Since the middle of 2015, the doctoral day has been the organizational core of the doctoral course. It takes place approximately every 6 weeks all day on a Friday throughout the year.
All PhD students of the institute, including members of the institute’s graduate colleges are invited.

The PhD-days follow a clear structure and are characterized by a recurring change of advice units in small groups, which focus on the individual thesis and common work units on subject matter, research methods, etc., which lie across the individual promotions.

Visiting scientists are invited regularly, especially for the working units in the plenary. In addition, the PhD-day offers opportunities for individual consultation by a university teacher.

On 18 May, talks and presentations were given on topics such as University’s Library as a service provider for researchers, Open Access and University Publishing as well as Research Data Management.