COUNTRY STATEMENTS

South Korea:

"In our opinion, we should take a closer look at the distribution and trade of natural resources. This topic should be of special concern to all countries."

USA:

"Natural resources and the use of those resources are, in terms of peacebuilding, very important. We therefore think it is necessary to address this topic and focus on long term solutions"

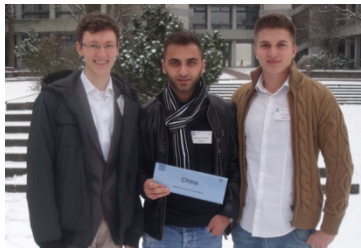

United Kingdom:

"I'm proud to present the United Kingdom and Northern Ireland for the third time. Attending the HiMUN project has been a great experience and opportunity to discuss relevant and up-to-date political issues with motivated young delegates."

Rwanda:

"By attending discussions in HiMUN 2014 we want to gain better collaboration and teamwork within the UN Security Council to help countries affected by crisis to recover."

China:

"Countries should show more political will and focus on their responsibilities when it comes to natural resources and the environment in the process from conflict to peacebuilding. We, the PRC, are trying to give our best in supporting governments affected by conflicts caused by resource shortage or distribution."

Lithuania:

"It is known that natural resources are the cause of many conflicts but they should also be utilized in post-conflict situations to help support UN peacebuilding efforts and reach stability. For this we need to be working on long term solutions on a global level. Also the change from nuclear power to renewable energies should be a high priority."

Nigeria:

"The main focus of the Nigerian government is to build up a more humane and productive society in which every citizen is valued. We are deeply concerned about environmental problems such as leaks at oil pipelines in the Niger Delta, and ready to support other countries in finding solutions as well."

Argentina:

"We are proud to participate in this year's HiMUN session. Regarding the transition from conflict to peacebuilding, we would like to emphasize the importance of managing high value resources by strengthening institutions and resource governance."

Saudi-Arabia:

"We, the delegates of Saudi Arabia, are willing to cooperate with the other members of the UN and look forward to find a good solution."

Russia:

"High-value resource management is the key instrument for peace and development in post-conflict countries with natural resources."

Australia:

"We are a leading trade nation for natural resources committed to a strong economy and trade liberalization. We are willing to give financial aid to those countries in need, in order to support their development and to stabilize their economies which will help preventing worldwide conflicts."

Chile

France:

"Proud and honored to once again represent the French Republic in the HiMUN simulation we were looking forward to good negotiations, a closer insight into the work of the UN Security Council and the possibilities to learn about the link between conflicts, natural resources and the path to peacebuilding."
