

HISTORY OF EUROPEAN MORALS

FROM AUGUSTUS TO CHARLEMAGNE

BY

WILLIAM EDWARD HARTPOLE LECKY, M. A.

THIRD EDITION, REVISED

IN TWO VOLUMES

VOL. II

NEW YORK AND LONDON ·
D. APPLETON AND COMPANY

1917

CONTENTS

OF THE SECOND VOLUME.

CHAPTER IV.

FROM CONSTANTINE TO CHARLEMAGNE.

	PAGE
Difference between the moral teaching of a philosophy and that of a religion	1
Moral efficacy of the Christian sense of sin	3
Dark views of human nature not common in the early Church .	5
The penitential system	6
Admirable efficacy of Christianity in eliciting disinterested enthusiasm	8
Great purity of the early Christians	11
The promise of the Church for many centuries falsified . . .	12
General sketch of the moral condition of the Byzantine and Western Empires	13
The question to be examined in this chapter is, the cause of this comparative failure	17
First Consequence of Christianity, a new Sense of the Sanctity of Human Life
This sense only very gradually acquired	17
Abortion.—Infanticide	20
Care of exposed children.—History of foundling hospitals . .	22

KANSAS CITY (MO.) PUBLIC LIBRARY

6552530

	PAGE
Suppression of the gladiatorial shows	34
Aversion to capital punishments	38
Its effect upon persecutions	49
Penal code not lightened by Christianity	41
Suicide	43-61
 Second Consequence of Christianity, to teach Universal Brotherhood
Laws concerning slavery	62
The Church discipline and services brought master and slave together	66
Consecration of the servile virtues	68
Impulse given to manumission	69
Serfdom	70
Ransom of captives	72
Charity.—Measures of the Pagans for the relief of the poor	73
Noble enthusiasm of the Christians in the cause of charity	79
Their exertions when the Empire was subverted	81
Inadequate place given to this movement in history	84
 Two Qualifications to our Admiration of the Charity of the Church
Theological notions concerning insanity	85
History of lunatic asylums	88
Indiscriminate almsgiving.—The political economy of charity	90
Injudicious charity often beneficial to the donor	95
History of the modifications of the old views about charity	96
Beneficial effect of the Church in supplying pure images to the imagination	99
Summary of the philanthropic achievements of Christianity	100
 The Growth of Asceticism
Causes of the ascetic movement	101
Its rapid extension	105
 The Saints of the Desert
General characteristics of their legends	107
Astounding penances attributed to the saints	107
Miseries and joys of the hermit life.—Dislike to knowledge	113
Hallucinations	116
The relations of female devotees with the anchorites	120

	PAGE
Calibacy was made the primal virtue.—Effects of this upon
moral teaching	122
Gloomy hue imparted to religion	122
Strong assertion of freewill	123
Depreciation of the qualities that accompany a strong physical temperament	123
Destruction of the domestic virtues.—Inhumanity of saints to their relations	124
Encouraged by leading theologians	131
Later instances of the same kind	135
Extreme theological animosity	137
 Decline of the Civic Virtues
History of the relations of Christianity to patriotism	140
Influence of the former in hastening the fall of the Empire	142
Permanent difference between ancient and modern societies in the matter of patriotism	144
Influence of this change on moral philosophy	146
Historians exaggerate the importance of civic virtues	147
 General Moral Condition of the Byzantine Empire
Stress laid by moralists on trivial matters	148
Corruption of the clergy	149
Childishness and vice of the populace	152
The better aspects of the Empire	153
 Distinctive Excellencies of the Ascetic Period
Asceticism the great school of self-sacrifice	154
Moral beauty of some of the legends	156
 Their Tendency to produce Humanity to Animals
Pagan legends of the intelligence of animals	161
Legal protection of animals	162
Traces of humanity to animals in the Roman Empire	163
Taught by the Pythagoreans and Plutarch	165
The first influence of Christianity not favourable to it	167
Legends in the lives of the saints connected with animals	168
Progress in modern times of humanity to animals	173
 The ascetic movement in the West took practical forms	177
Attitude of the Church to the barbarians.—Conversion of the latter	179

	PAGE
Christianity adulterated by the barbarians.—Legends of the conflict between the old gods and the new faith . . .	18
Monachism
Causes of its attraction	183
New value placed on obedience and humility.—Results of this change	185
Relation of Monachism to the Intellectual Virtues
Propriety of the expression 'intellectual virtue'.	188
The love of abstract truth	189
The notion of the guilt of error, considered abstractedly, absurd	190
Some error, however, due to indolence or voluntary partiality	191
And some to the unconscious bias of a corrupt nature . . .	192
The influence of scepticism on intellectual progress . . .	193
The Church always recognised the tendency of character to govern opinion	194
Total destruction of religious liberty	194
The Monasteries the Receptacles of Learning
Preservation of classical literature.—Manner in which it was regarded by the Church	199
Charm of monkish scholarship	203
The monasteries not on the whole favourable to knowledge .	205
They were rather the reservoirs than the creators of literature .	208
Fallacy of attributing to the monasteries the genius that was displayed in theology	209
Other fallacies concerning the services of the monks . . .	209
Decline of the love of truth	212
Value which the monks attached to pecuniary compensations for crime	213
Doctrine of future torment much elaborated as a means of extorting money	219
Visions of hell	220
Peter Lombard	226
Extreme superstition and terrorism	228
Purgatory	232
Moral Condition of Western Europe
Scanty historical literature	235
Atrocious crimes	236

	PAGE
The seventh century the age of saints	239
Manner in which characters were estimated illustrated by the account of Clovis in Gregory of Tours	240
Benefits conferred by the monasteries	243
Missionary labours	246
 Growth of a Military and an Aristocratic Spirit
Antipathy of the early Christians to military life	248
The belief that battle was the special sphere of Providential interposition consecrated it	249
Military habits of the barbarians	250
Military triumphs of Mohammedanism	251
Legends protesting against military Christianity	253
Review of the influence of Christianity upon war	254
 Consecration of Secular Rank
The Pagan Empire became continually more despotic	260
The early Christians taught passive obedience in temporal, but independence in religious matters	261
After Constantine, their policy much governed by their interests	261
Attitude of the Church towards Julian	262
And of Gregory the Great towards Phocas	263
The Eastern clergy soon sank into submission to the civil power	265
Independence of the Western clergy.—Compact of Leo and Pepin	266
Effect of monachism on the doctrine of passive obedience	269
The 'benefices'	270
Fascination exercised by Charlemagne over the popular imagi- nation	271
A king and a warrior became the ideal of greatness	273
Conclusion	274

CHAPTER V.

THE POSITION OF WOMEN.

Importance and difficulties of this branch of history	275
Women in savage life	276

	PAGE
First stage of progress the cessation of the sale of wives. —
Rise of the dowry	276
Second stage the establishment of monogamy	278
Women in the poetic age of Greece	276
Women in the historical age ranked lower. Difficulty of real- ising the Greek feelings on the subject.	281
Nature of the problem of the relations of the sexes	282
Recognition in Greece of two distinct orders of womanhood	286
Position of the Greek wives	287
 The Courtesans
Elevated by the worship of Aphrodite	291
And by the æsthetic enthusiasm	292
And by the unnatural forms Greek vice assumed	294
General estimate of Greek public opinion concerning women	295
 Roman Public Opinion much purer
The flamens and the vestals	297
Position of women during the Republic	298
Dissolution of manners at the close of the Republic	302
Indisposition to marriage	304
Legal emancipation of women	304
Unbounded liberty of divorce.—Its consequences	306
Amount of female virtue which still subsisted in Rome	308
Legislative measures to enforce female virtue	312
Moralists begin to enforce the reciprocity of obligation in mar- riage	312
And to censure prostitution.—Growth of the mystical concep- tion of chastity	316
 Christian Influence
Laws of the Christian emperors	316
Effects of the penitential discipline, and of the examples of the martyrs	317
Legends	318
Asceticism greatly degraded marriage	319
Disapproval of second marriages.—History of the opinions of Pagans and Christians on the subject	324
The celibacy of the clergy.—History and effects of this doc- trine	328

	PAGE
Asceticism produced a very low view of the character of women.—Jewish opinions on this point	338
The canon law unfavourable to the proprietary rights of women	339
The barbarian invasions assisted the Church in purifying morals	340
Barbarian heroines	341
Long continuance of polygamy among the Kings of Gaul . .	343
Laws of the barbarians	344
Strong Christian assertion of the equality of obligation in marriage	345
This doctrine has not retained its force	346
Condemnation of transitory connections.—Roman concubines .	347
A religious ceremony slowly made an essential in marriage .	351
Condemnation of divorce	352
Compulsory marriage abolished	353
Condemnation of mixed marriages.—Domestic unhappiness caused by theologians	353
 Relation of Christianity to the Feminine Virtues
Comparison of male and female characteristics	358
The Pagan ideal essentially masculine.—Its contrast to the Christian ideal	361
Conspicuous part of women in the early Church	363
Deaconesses	365
Widows	366
Reverence bestowed on the Virgin	367
At the Reformation the feminine type remained with Catholicism	368
The conventual system	369
Conclusion	370
 INDEX	 373