

Contents

Acknowledgements	viii
1 Introduction	1
2 John Duns Scotus	7
Section 1: Life and works	7
Section 2: Talking about God	8
Section 3: Universals and individuals	13
Section 4: Will and intellect	18
Section 5: Scotus's political theory and the Declaration of Arbroath	25
3 The Fifteenth Century	34
Section 1: The context	34
Section 2: John Ireland and The Meroure of Wyssdome	35
Section 3: Freedom and good governance	36
Section 4: Freedom and foreknowledge	40
Section 5: The accession of rulers	44
4 The Circle of John Mair	47
Section 1: John Mair and his circle	47
Section 2: John Mair	48
Section 3: George Lokert	61
Section 4: William Manderston	71
Section 5: Robert Galbraith	81
5 Humanism and After	87
Section 1: Renaissance humanism arrives in Scotland	87
Section 2: Abbreviated logic	90
Section 3: Some Scottish Aristotelians	93
Section 4: Florentius Volusenus (Florence Wilson)	97
Section 5: Some seventeenth-century texts	99

6	Scotland Moves into the Age of Enlightenment	104
	Section 1: Three philosophers	104
	Section 2: Gershom Carmichael	104
	Section 3: George Turnbull: Principles of Moral Philosophy	108
	Section 4: George Turnbull: Christian Philosophy	117
	Section 5: George Turnbull on art	120
	Section 6: Francis Hutcheson on the idea of beauty	123
	Section 7: Francis Hutcheson on the idea of virtue	133
7	David Hume	147
	Section 1: A portrait of Hume	147
	Section 2: Impressions and ideas	150
	Section 3: Causation	160
	Section 4: The external world	165
	Section 5: Personal identity	168
	Section 6: Passion and its slave	172
	Section 7: The standard of taste	181
	Section 8: The Treatise and the Enquiries	183
	Section 9: Hume 'the great infidel'	184
8	Adam Smith	196
	Section 1: A portrait of Adam Smith	196
	Section 2: Spectatorship and sympathy – Smith's context	200
	Section 3: Sympathy and pleasure	207
	Section 4: Sympathy and moral categories	210
	Section 5: The impartial spectator	213
	Section 6: Smith's moral naturalism	217
	Section 7: Justice and the other virtues	218
	Section 8: Scientific progress	223
	Section 9: Morality, science and art	228
9	The Scottish School of Common Sense Philosophy	235
	Section 1: Common sense and its criteria	235
	Section 2: A portrait of Thomas Reid	238
	Section 3: An anatomy of the mind – methodological preliminaries	243
	Section 4: An anatomy of the mind – intellectual powers	246
	Section 5: An anatomy of the mind – active powers	262
	Section 6: An anatomy of the mind – the fine arts	270
	Section 7: Lord Kames and the question of free will	273

Section 8: George Campbell, common sense and language	280
Section 9: Dugald Stewart, common sense and mind	284
Section 10: Sir William Hamilton – a moment of transition	290
10 The Nineteenth Century: Ferrier to Seth	301
Section 1: What became of the Scottish Enlightenment?	301
Section 2: J. F. Ferrier and the philosophy of consciousness	304
Section 3: Alexander Bain and the empirical study of the mind	313
Section 4: Andrew Seth Pringle-Pattison and personal idealism	314
11 Realism and Idealism: Some Twentieth-century Narratives	324
Section 1: Introduction	324
Section 2: Aspects of realism: Norman Kemp Smith, John Anderson and John Laird	325
Section 3: Aspects of idealism: H. J. Paton, C. A. Campbell and John Macmurray	339
12 Conclusion	365
Bibliography	370
Index	381