

Contents

Introduction: politics and the history of political ideas
Politics and ethics among the ancient Hebrews
Growth and general conception of the polis
Political thought and opinion from Hesiod to Socrates
Plato and the rational polis
Aristotle and political society
Political thought and attitudes from Alexander to the triumph of Rome
Roman experience and political thought
The New Testament and early Christianity
Christian attitudes and politics: Tertullian to Augustine
Augustine and the politics of the two cities
Main currents from Augustine to the High Middle Ages
Medieval law and the political theory of the lawyers
Scholasticism and the political mind of Thomas Aquinas
The ideologies of the medieval sects and the papal inquisition
The decline of medieval thought and attitudes
Morality and politics: Machiavelli and the Renaissance
Politics and morals in the early sixteenth century Reformation
The secular state, sovereignty, and the right of resistance
The new science and the contract: Thomas Hobbes
The quest for a commonweal: utopianism, radical democracy, and eschatology
Toward the eighteenth century: Locke, the contract, and natural rights
The revival of feeling: Rousseau, nature, and the civil state
Empiricism and the onslaught on social contract: Hume
Hegel, organicism, and modern political thought
Marx, the Marxists, and modern politics
The modern liberal tradition
The modern conservative tradition
Non-Marxian socialism
Anarchism and antistatism: evolution and doctrines
Fascism and National Socialism: antecedents and doctrines
In perspective: some perennial issues of political thought