

Table of Contents

Fan-li —General principles governing the composition of this work	ix
Author's foreword	xi
Translator's preface	xiii
Notes on the principles guiding translation	xvii
Introduction	3-27
Section One: The Starting Point of China's Political Thought	3
Section Two: The Periodization of the History of Chinese Political Thought—in Accordance with the Main Outlines of the Development of Thought	7
Section Three: The Periodization of the History of Chinese Political Thought—in Accordance with the Historical Backgrounds of Thought	18
PART ONE: The Political Thought of the Feudal World (One)—The Period of Creativity
Chapter One: The Various Schools of Political Thought in the Pre-Ch'in Age	28-78
Section One: The Historical Background	28
Section Two: The Geographical Distribution	42
Section Three: Interacting Influences	65
Section Four: Chronological Sequence	69
Chapter Two: Confucius (551-479 B.C.)	79-142
Section One: Confucius' Life and His Age	79
Section Two: "Following Chou" and the "Rectification of Names"	93
Section Three: Jen (Benevolence)	101
Section Four: Virtue, Rites, Politics, and Punishments	108
Section Five: The Superior Man	116
Section Six: Great Community, Lesser Tranquility, and the Theory of the Three Ages	124
Chapter Three: Mencius and Hsün Tzu	143-213
Section One: The Lives and Times of Mencius and Hsün Tzu	143
Section Two: The Importance of the People	148
Section Three: "Stability in Unity"	167
Section Four: Alternating Order and Chaos	177
Section Five: Li (The Rites)	182
Section Six: The Methods of Governing and the Men Who Govern	194
Section Seven: The Distinction between Heaven and Man	206

Chapter Four: Mo Tzu (ca. 490–403 B.C.)	214–272
Section One: Mo Tzu's Life and His Times	214
Section Two: Universal Love and Mutual Benefit	225
Section Three: Agreement with the Superior	235
Section Four: The Will of Heaven and the Existence of Spirits	243
Section Five: Elevating the Worthy	250
Section Six: Economy of Expenditure	257
Section Seven: Condemnation of Offensive Warfare	265
Chapter Five: Lao Tzu and Chuang Tzu	273–318
Section One: The Lives and Times of Lao Tzu and Chuang Tzu	273
Section Two: "Reversal is the Movement of Tao"	283
Section Three: "Taking No Action, Yet Leaving Nothing Undone"	291
Section Four: Equalizing Things and Transcending Life	300
Section Five: Letting People Alone	306
Chapter Six: Kuan Tzu	319–367
Section One: Kuan Tzu's Life and Times	319
Section Two: Elevating the Ruler and Following the People's Wishes	322
Section Three: Governing by Law	333
Section Four: Regulating Customs	347
Section Five: Regulated Livelihood	355
Section Six: A Regulated Officialdom	362
Chapter Seven: Lord Shang and Han Fei Tzu	368–424
Section One: Lord Shang's and Han Fei Tzu's Lives and Times	368
Section Two: Power	381
Section Three: Agriculture and War	393
Section Four: Law	397
Section Five: Methods	409
PART TWO The Political Thought of the Authoritarian Empire (One)—The Period of Continuity
Chapter Eight: Mohists and Legalists in the Ch'in and Han Periods	427–468
Section One: The Decline of Mohist Learning	427
Section Two: Li Ssu (ca. 280–208 B.C.)	434
Section Three: Continuing Strands of Legalist Thought	446
Section Four: The Struggle for Supremacy between Legalism and Confucianism, and Their Subsequent Convergence	465
Chapter Nine: From Chia Yi to Chung-ch'ang T'ung	469–548
Section One: The Revival of Confucian Learning	469
Section Two: Chia Yi (200–168 B.C.)	484

Section Three: Tung Chung-shu (179–104 B.C.)	484
Section Four: Heaven-Man Correlative Theories after Tung Chung-shu	503
Section Five: From Huan T'an to Chung-ch'ang T'ung	531
Chapter Ten: From the Lü-shih Ch'un-ch'iu to Wang Ch'ung's Lun Heng	549–601
Section One: Taoists and Eclectics	549
Section Two: Han Dynasty Huang-Lao	552
Section Three: The Lü-shih Ch'un-ch'iu (241 B.C.)	556
Section Four: Huai-nan Hung-lieh (ca. 130 B.C.)	570
Section Five: Wang Ch'ung, Lun Heng (ca. A.D. 80)	582
Chapter Eleven: From Wang Pi to Ko Hung	602–667
Section One: The Backgrounds and Sources of Lao-Chuang Thought in the Wei and Chin Periods (A.D. 220–419)	602
Section Two: "Taking No Action"	607
Section Three: "No Ruler"	619
Section Four: The Lieh Tzu	630
Section Five: Ko Hung	644
Section Six: Disputes Introduced by Buddhism	656
Glossary	675
Bibliography	703
Index	715

