

Contents

Preface xi

Introduction 1

PART I CLASSICAL AND MEDIEVAL POLITICAL THEORY

1 Socrates 5

The pre-Socratics; being versus becoming; Socrates and the Sophists; empirical versus ethical knowledge; virtue as an ethical standard; virtue as happiness; the ethical and the political; virtue and society; virtue as knowledge and virtue as power; nature and convention; the problem of pleasure and pain; the unity of ethics and politics; philosophy and civil disobedience; the Socratic epistemology and the Socratic method; the concept and a priori knowledge; opinion versus knowledge; the cosmic order.

2 Plato 23

Plato: the unity of philosophy and politics; the Academy and the trip to Syracuse; the question of Justice; the ideal and the best possible state; Justice as the interest of the stronger party; the case for injustice; the Just state and the Just man; the unity of ethics and politics; Justice and the division of labor; the paradox of philosophic rulership; communism and education; the Good; the theory of form; Plato's dualism; politics and the cave; public opinion as sophistry; the decline of the ideal state and the unjust man; the myth of metals and the injustice of politics; individual versus political ethics; the tyranny of reason.

3 Aristotle 51

Plato's influence; the Lyceum; political science as a practical science; the theory of immanent form; matter and form; actuality and potentiality; teleology; the unity of ethics and politics; virtue as reasoned action; virtue as a mean; virtue and opinion; the state and subordinate communities; the state and the good life; the private and public domains; form and constitution; the classification of constitutions; constitutional types and social class; polity and the mixed constitution; Justice as the rule of law; Justice as proportional equality; the aristocratic ideal; the critique of Plato; the radical versus the conservative temperament.

4 Cicero 69

Cicero and the classical tradition; Alexander the Great and the age of empire; the Hellenistic age and the new schools; Skepticism and the New Academy; Cicero's eclecticism; individualism, subjectivism, and cosmopolitanism; universal equality and apolitical virtue; Cynicism, Epicureanism, and the theory of contract; Stoicism: natural law and the two cities; fate and the rational will; politics as duty; the statesman-philosopher; the res-publica; Cicero, Caesar, and Augustus; the concordia ordinum and the senatorial ideal; the Scipionic Circle and humanitas; the commonwealth and natural law; commonwealth and civitas; Polybius and the composite state; the theory of the ideal republic; natural law, civil law, and justice; Cicero as conservative; law as political philosophy; the unity of law and magistracy; consuls and tribunes; the Senate and the rule of wisdom; the people's assemblies and republican liberty; the failure of the classical city-state model; the Principate and the end of the Republic; the rise of Christianity.

5 St. Augustine 103

The evolution of Roman law; Justinian's codification; the collapse of the Roman Empire; the decline of political philosophy; political withdrawal and the Stoicism of Seneca and Marcus Aurelius; Plotinus and neo-Platonism; philosophy, religion, and salvation; the rise of Christianity; St. Augustine and the origins of Christian political philosophy; St. Augustine's Manichaen dualism; sin and the Christian concept of evil; the psychology of evil; the two cities; the value of peace; the state as convention; the displacement of the classical vision; the separation of ethics and politics; the decline of political theory; the theocratic theory of the state; sin as a political solution; Augustinian political analysis and the theory of realpolitik.

6 St. Thomas Aquinas 123

The Church and the nation-state; the rediscovery of Aristotle and the synthesis of classical and Christian thought; John of Salisbury and the organic metaphor; St. Thomas's Aristotelianism; the monarchical ideal; teleological naturalism and Christian spiritualism; the natural and the supernatural; the hierarchy of law; human reason and natural law; natural law as participation in eternal law; the compatibility of political and spiritual life; human nature: the predominance of reason; the supremacy of the sacred and the legitimacy of the secular; theology, philosophy, faith, and reason; liberation from the metaphor of the two cities; the disintegration of the Thomistic synthesis; the disjunction of ethics and politics.

PART II MODERN POLITICAL THEORY

7 Machiavelli 137

Machiavelli and the Renaissance; realism and empiricism; the decline of feudalism and the emergence of the modern nation-state; Machiavelli and nationalism; the modern conception of human nature; the rules of power politics; the anti-Machiavellian tradition; the logic of violence and the art of manipulation; popular rule and political stability; Machiavelli's republicanism; civic virtue, pluralism, and equality; a political religion, a theology of action; power versus authority; the Platonic order inverted; modern sophistry; virtue as power; authority as illusion; the divorce of ethics and politics; ethical naturalism; the state as an end in itself; the illusion of nationalism; virtue and fortune.

8 Hobbes 161

The Reformation and the nation-state; the Puritan revolution and the scientific revolution; the revolt against Aristotle; materialism and the new empiricism; body and motion; mathematical truth and nominalism; the physics of psychology; knowing and willing; appetite and aversion, pleasure and pain; the will to power; the rejection of the Socratic conception of freedom; the modern theory of contract; consent versus divine right; the state as rationally constructed machine; human behavior and the state of nature; the compositive and resolute methods; the state of war; the paradox of power; the modern theory of natural law; the theory of absolutism; the theory of sovereignty; the paradox of consent; law as command; the nominalist theory of justice; the language of power; modern Hobbesianism; the theory of the negative state; power and self-interest; Hobbes's sovereign and the weakness of power; Hobbes and the summum bonum; modern science and the theory of authority.

9 Locke 193

Locke and liberal democracy; the Glorious Revolution; radical individualism and the negative state; Locke and Hobbes: materialism, empiricism, and nominalism; the tabula rasa and the theory of toleration; Locke versus Hobbes and Filmer; paternal versus political power; the theory of contract reconsidered; the state of nature and natural law; the two-stage contract; popular sovereignty; the right of revolution; the state of nature reconsidered; the right of property;

natural right; money and the right of accumulation; the Protestant ethic and equality of opportunity; utilitarianism, naturalism, and natural law; the separation of powers; executive prerogative; Locke and liberal constitutionalism; the problem of social class; property and the right to vote; women, patriarchy, and the social contract; liberal democracy and capitalism; Locke's ambivalence and the paradox of liberal consciousness.

10 Rousseau 221

The loss of natural liberty; the Enlightenment; the psychopathology of a political theorist; social inequality and the perversion of reason; the theory of contract; Hobbes and Locke revised; the nature of natural man; a civilized misreading of the state of nature; the contract: justice versus instinct; the unity of sovereignty and liberty; popular sovereignty reconsidered; the unity of force and freedom; the general will; the unity of self-interest and public interest; liberty as obligation; positive versus negative liberty; the positive versus the negative state; the ideal state and social equality; economics as a moral concern; censorship, civil religion, and patriotism; the theory of sovereignty revised; the will of all versus the general will; the problem of government; the theory of will and forms of government; the aristocratic ideal; the unity of ethics and politics; power versus authority; the conventional basis of morality; the rejection of natural law and natural right; the critique of the nation state; the ambiguity of the general will; the contradictions of Western political thought.

PART III CONTEMPORARY POLITICAL THEORY

11 Conservatism 259

The French Revolution and the Rights of Man; Napoleon and liberal democracy; Edmund Burke and the Holy Alliance; the Whigs and the Glorious Revolution; Burke as reformer; popular versus philosophical conservatism; the critique of liberalism; natural versus prescriptive rights; philosophy versus politics; presumption; prejudice and the reason of history; the organic view of society; prudence or the art of statesmanship; reform versus change; the theory of virtual representation; the French Revolution and the destruction of authority; mass society, tyranny, and the paradox of liberal individualism; Burke's Aristotelianism; the critique of ideology; the sociology of ideology and the democratization of political ideas; ideology, war, and revolution; the limitations of Burke's vision; the historical problem; romanticism and reaction; conservatism as an ideology.

12 Classical Liberalism 281

Hume and utilitarianism; Bentham: the rejection of natural law and natural right; the ethics of utility; the greatest happiness of the greatest number; the individualistic conception of community; utility and majoritarianism; the science of pleasure and the felicific calculus; law as artificial consequences; the legislator as social scientist; James Mill: utility and liberal democracy; the reform of representation in parliament; property and pleasure; government and community; representative democracy and the liberal theory of representation; Hobbes and Locke united; the economic theory of classical liberalism; the physiocrats, Adam Smith, and laissez faire capitalism; the unseen hand and enlightened self-interest; Herbert Spencer and Social Darwinism; classical liberalism and the condition of the working class; the political failure of the middle class.

13 Modern Liberalism 298

De Tocqueville: the sociology of democracy; the tyranny of the majority; equality and liberty; public opinion and bureaucratic despotism; pluralism, mass society, and the theory of association; the social structure of democracy; John Stuart Mill: utilitarianism revised; the quality of pleasure and the superior individual; simple expediency versus higher values; the revised theory of liberty; moral progress and the quest for truth; proportional representation and mass education; T.H. Green and the Oxford Idealists; German idealism and modern liberalism; the classical view and the rejection of utilitarianism; the unity of will and reason; the theory of positive freedom; the social basis of rights; the right of property and the positive state; modern versus classical liberalism; modern liberalism in theory and practice: ambiguities and paradoxes; self-development as social engineering; democracy: moral progress versus moral anarchy; liberal ideals and the civilized state.

14 Marxism 326

Marx: scientific versus utopian socialism; the materialist conception of history and the critique of idealism; the historical acts and the relations of production; property and the division of mental and material labor; history as class conflict; life and consciousness; substructure and superstructure; ideology as false consciousness; idealism as ideology; the inevitability of communism; capital, profit, and surplus value; the labor theory of value; the theory of alienation; the law of the falling rate of profit and the anarchy of production; the dialectic; Marx versus Hegel; the historical significance of the working class; the unity of theory and practice; revolution as an epistemology; communism and the end of alienation; liberalism as alienated theory; Marx as antipolitical theorist; Eduard Bernstein and revisionism; Lenin's theory of imperialism; the party; spontaneity versus consciousness; Marxism and nationalism; Marxism and the end of communism and the rebirth of Marxism; Marxism as ideology.

15 The Age of Ideology 359

Western political thought and the critique of ideologies; ideologies and the unity of ethics and politics; the higher principles: classical and ideological; ideologies versus moral autonomy; Mazzini: nationalism and the subversion of ideology; state centralization and the loss of moral autonomy; the sociology of ideology: industrialism and secularism; the nation state and the higher principles; ideology and the problem of authority; authority as science; ideology, the state of war, and the weakness of power.

Glossary 371

Bibliography 377

Index 385