

A 374818

Political Philosophy

An Historical Introduction

Contents

Acknowledgments	viii
1 A short introduction	1
The idea of human nature or the human good as ‘function’: normative anthropology	2
My ‘story’ of political philosophy – and my cast of characters	4
Enduring issues in political philosophy	8
2 Classical Greek political philosophy: beginnings	12
Nature or nurture?	12
Protagoras’ democratic traditionalism	14
The functionalistic foundation of the political aretai in nature (physis)	17
Glaucón’s contractarian political theory	19
3 Plato: Government for corrupted intellects	23
Socrates’ polis of pigs	23
The ‘republic’ of Plato’s Republic	25
The human ergon and the purpose of political organization	28
Furthering rationality by means of the polis ?	30
Why should anyone return to the cave?	33

4 Aristotle: politics as the master art	36
The human good: intellectual and political	36
'Successful political activity' (eupraxia) as a grand end?	41
The polis as a complete community	47
The rôle of politics: the master art?	51
Epilogue	55
5 Christianity: a political religion?	57
The New Testament and beyond	58
Pauline cosmopolitanism	63
The Roman empire Christianized	71
The advent of tempora Christiana (the Christian era)	74
6 Augustine and Aquinas: politics for saints and sinners	77
St. Augustine	79
St. Thomas Aquinas	92
7 Hobbes and Locke: seventeenth-century contractarianism	118
Thomas Hobbes: natural law simplified and modernized	122
John Locke: divinely mandated autonomy, natural rights, and property	144
8 Rousseau and Marx: reaction to bourgeois-liberalism	160
Jean-Jacques Rousseau: autonomous citizens for the true republic	162
Karl Marx: distortion of the human function within the bourgeois-liberal state	181
9 John Rawls: liberalism ascendant?	198
Egalitarian justice: as the "first virtue of social institutions": basic assumptions	200
Rawls' two principles of justice: what they apply to and why	207
Consensus, public reason, and the distinction between citoyen and bourgeois	213
The ultimate justification of Rawlsian liberalism?	217
10 A very short conclusion	222

Notes	228
Index	255